Commentary

Mortgage and Housing Market

The strong rally in the housing market has continued once again, with Nationwide reporting house prices increased by 5% annually in September, the highest growth rate in four years. Reports also show that the price of the average UK house hit a new record, pushing over £225,000 for the first time. Undoubtedly much of this has been boosted by the reduction in Stamp Duty which, according to Onrec, has also had associated knock-on benefits to the construction, property development, mortgage broking and real estate industries who have benefitted from increased business and enquiries. According to the Bank of England, around 84,700 mortgages were approved in August, the highest since October 2017 and taking the overall number to 415,000 approvals this year, and GetAgent's latest homebuyer demand hotspots index showed current buyer demand levels are at their highest since the start of last year, up 9% annually and 8% in the last quarter. Some commentators such as RICS warned that following a fourth consecutive month of increasing demand, sales are expected to weaken in the year ahead as unemployment rises, and a PwC report cautioned on potential weaker or negative markets in 2021 depending on the development of different Covid-19 scenarios, but Savills reported more than a million homes are expected to sell by the end of the year and predicted a 4% increase in prices this year, followed by stagnation next year when the Stamp Duty effect comes to an end but a return to growth in 2022 and 2023 with a total expectation of a 20% by 2024.

RMBS Market

The UK RMBS market also continued to recover after a quieter summer, albeit the primary market saw just two publicly distributed new deals along with another privately placed refinancing transaction, and with a fairly small pipeline building. Interestingly, one of those placed deals was a pool of BTL loans originated by TML, funded by their BTL partner Shawbrook Bank rather than UKML. The deal priced competitively with the senior notes placed at a spread of Sonia+110bps. Meanwhile secondary markets tightened slowly and steadily particularly in the Prime STS sector where bids are now comfortably inside pre-Covid levels, and this in turn led spreads in BTL and Non-Conforming deals to continue to grind tighter across the capital stack.

Fund Commentary

The number of remaining borrowers taking payment holidays continues to fall as the first cohorts of borrowers who took extension start to come to an end, albeit not enough data is available yet to fully assess where the final quantum might settle. Undoubtedly, all of our BTL portfolios have performed extremely well, and whilst a small proportion may ultimately result in longer term arrears, the vast majority of borrowers have or are now returning to making payments. The owner-occupied TML portfolios unsurprisingly saw the highest number of payment holidays but these have also fallen sharply and the residual number that may fall into arrears is still difficult to gauge at this time with next month's data likely to be key to making that judgement. Meanwhile, the portfolio managers have been making early preparations for future securitisation activity. As part of this, a virtual investor meeting was held to introduce RMBS investors to Keystone, following a similar pattern to the introductory meetings held for TML back in the summer of 2018 leading up to the marketing and launch of the Barley Hill No.1 transaction in Q1 of the following year. Whilst Keystone have been originating mortgages since 2007, their loans have either been purchased directly onto bank balance sheets or typically formed a smaller part of larger securitisation loan pools purchased by an established originator, and so RMBS investors have rarely had the opportunity to meet the Keystone team and analyse their origination and processes more closely. Given the outstanding performance of their loan book through Covid-19 period, this slightly quieter period in RMBS markets was an excellent opportunity to begin to familiarise investors with Keystone and their products and to start the investor education process on a positive note.

Investment Outlook

The market continues to pay close attention to payment holiday reporting across all ABS transactions and, generally, as many of the initial three-month payment holidays have expired and not been extended, concentrations have been dropping. We expect this trend to continue over the forthcoming reporting periods, as the window for applications in the UK closes at the end of October, but there may be pockets of underperformance in some sectors with the potential for arrears to increase. However, it is worth reiterating that arrears do not necessarily translate into defaults and the portfolio managers monitor the performance of all transactions on an ongoing basis. Following the relatively quiet amount of primary issuance since the summer, there is a small pipeline signalled for the next month or so, although the pace of issuance is likely to tail off after that. The supply-demand technical will in all likelihood remain in place, particularly for primary RMBS issuance, which will lend further support to spreads but the pace of overall retraction in RMBS will most likely slow in line with the wider market.
