Market Commentary

- A 'risk-off' tone dominated market sentiment in February, with risk assets experiencing high levels of volatility and government bonds rallying sharply. These moves stemmed from a combination of weaker-than-expected US economic data and a reaction to the increasingly likely threat of US tariffs. US economic data released during the month included a downside surprise in the Services Purchasing Managers' Index of 49.7, which was significantly lower than the 53.4 expected by the Bloomberg consensus. In addition, the University of Michigan and The Conference Board's consumer confidence surveys were both below expectations, pointing to slower consumer demand than previously anticipated. At the beginning of the month, data showing a 0.9% decline in retail sales heightened these fears. Moreover, with President Donald Trump reiterating his position that the US will impose 25% tariffs on Canada and Mexico at the beginning of March, investors scaled back their expectations of US economic growth in 2025, which increased the likelihood of earlier interest rate cuts. The market is finely poised as it tries to determine what the true implications of impending US tariffs will be on both the US and its trading partners. At the same time, investors are trying to establish how the geopolitical landscape will unfold given the uncertainty around President Trump's comments and actions.
- Fixed income markets in Europe followed the same risk-off trend, albeit to a lesser extent, as economic data was more in line with market expectations. It also emerged that Germany's designated new government was trying to engineer off-balance-sheet funds for defence and infrastructure spending before taking office. This suggests the tide has turned for Europe's willingness to spend on defence, and translates into the possibility of higher economic growth than previously expected through government spending.
- In the financials space, European banks' full-year 2024 reporting season has thus far shown the resilience of the sector in terms of profitability, capital positions and asset quality. Despite the outlook for lower rates, the banking sector has continued to strengthen its non-interest fee income, while credit provisions remain below the average for a cycle. This has helped to facilitate a highly active primary market, with Additional Tier 1 issuance reaching €16bn equivalent in the year to date, more than double the volume seen over the same period in each of the past five years. The deluge of supply was met with strong demand for paper as investors took the opportunity to lock in attractive yields for high-quality banking names. High-yield supply, on the other hand, has underwhelmed, adding to the strong technical that built up towards the end of last year.

Portfolio Commentary

- Government bonds drove returns for the month, with credit also performing well. As a result, the Fund outperformed its benchmark by 23 basis points.
- Credit returns were very similar across sectors, apart from insurance, which returned more than the portfolio average.
- Utility hybrids also performed very well, returning more than their yield.

Market Outlook and Strategy

- There has been a marked contrast between the US, which has escaped a 'hard landing' economic scenario and looks set for decent growth in 2025, compared with weak core (and continuing to weaken in some cases) European economies, with the German election pretty much as expected. However, forecasts of US growth have declined slightly from high levels.
- The UK appears to be suffering due to the Budget, with survey data pointing to a significant deterioration in both business and consumer sentiment. The Bank of England has halved its economic growth forecast from 1.5% to 0.75% for 2025, while it expects inflation to remain above target for two years.
- Credit spreads are approaching the tightest levels since the global financial crisis, and while the portfolio managers have no default concerns on any portfolio holdings, the risk of modest spread widening is possible. Thus, the portfolio retains a lower credit spread duration position than the historical average for mark-to-market reasons.
