Market Commentary

- The 'risk-off' tone that developed in February carried through into March as US President Donald Trump continued to drive forward his tariff agenda. Trump began the month by announcing the imposition of a 25% tariff on all aluminium and steel exports to the US, which prompted reciprocal measures from trading partners. This included Canada, which imposed counter-tariffs of 25% on over $20bn of US goods. By the end of the month, the US had imposed 25% tariffs on all automotive imports ahead of 2 April, when Trump is expected to apply further sweeping tariffs on US imports. Investor scepticism around the impact of such tariffs on US GDP increased, with economic growth forecasts revised as business confidence declined amid uncertainty about policy and the wider macroeconomic backdrop. The effects are also expected to be compounded by accelerating inflation, prompting economists' fears of stagflation in the US.
- To compound the market volatility, Germany unexpectedly announced plans for one of the largest fiscal regimes in history as leaders of the Social Democrats and Christian Democrats said they were set to approve three material changes to the country's debt limits. These included €500bn for infrastructure investment, an exemption from the 'debt brake' for defence spending above 1% of GDP and a rise in the net borrowing cap for federal states from 0% to 0.35% of GDP. The announcement resulted in a sharp move wider in German bund yields as investors expect it to lead to an increase in the supply of bonds in both the near and medium term. At the same time, they expect it to promote economic growth, thereby reducing the need for the European Central Bank to cut rates at the pace the market had previously anticipated. As a result, bonds underperformed US Treasuries in March.
- Spreads across high-yield indices widened noticeably over the month as investors grew wary of the impact of impending tariffs on corporate profitability. Spread decompression was also seen among investment grade corporates, with US corporate spreads widening more than their European counterparts. Primary markets were mostly quiet, before they sparked into life towards the end of March as issuers attempted to launch deals ahead of the US tariff announcements on 2 April. Despite the weaker credit environment, the majority of deals were met with strong investor demand, pricing at levels markedly tighter than initial indications, thanks to books that were many times oversubscribed.

Portfolio Commentary

- The portfolio managers (PMs) executed several changes within the portfolio during the month, responding quickly to the shifting macroeconomic landscape. The team switched 2% of long-dated German bunds for 2% of 10-year Treasuries, favouring the latter as a 'risk-off' instrument following Germany's surprise fiscal expansion plans. The PMs also reduced exposure to US high yield and investment grade corporates, preferring their European counterparts due to the uncertainty about US economic growth and what this will mean for domestic corporate profitability.
- The Fund posted a negative total return in March as elevated volatility impacted both corporate and government bond performance. The least negative contributor was European high yield as European corporates were seen to be less affected by the tariff headlines. The biggest detractor from the Fund's performance was the government rates bucket, with bunds suffering as a result of Germany's surprise fiscal expansion announcement.

Market Outlook and Strategy

- Market sentiment will continue to be driven by President Trump's tariff agenda, with 2 April a key date in investors' diaries as he is expected to give details of upcoming US import tariffs. Both the timing and severity of these measures will be important in determining the extent to which they will affect economic growth and, consequently, risk appetite among market participants. Forecasts of US economic growth could continue to be downgraded, while US inflation concerns are likely to mount in line with an acceleration of Trump's policy plans. Economic data will also continue to influence the market's expectation of the future path of interest rates, which has fluctuated significantly lately. The technical among corporate bonds has weakened marginally as a result of the elevated volatility, although we continue to believe that carry will be the main driver of returns for the remainder of the year.
