Market Commentary

- US Treasury volatility levels were elevated again in September, as influential economic data points and the Federal Reserve's (Fed) updated 'dot plots' and economic projections led investors to reprice the probability of near-term interest rate cuts. The US labour report, released at the beginning of the month, showed that August's non-farm payroll number came in well below expectations. There were further downward revisions to the previous two months of data, while the unemployment rate ticked up on an unrounded basis. Together with geopolitical headlines, this contributed to two-year and 10-year Treasury yields falling by 11 basis points (bp) and 15bp, respectively, in the first week of September. The move was partly cancelled out later in the month, thanks to the Fed's policymaking meeting. This presented investors with fresh dot-plot projections that showed a slower pace of rate cuts over the next two years relative to market expectations and economic projections that pointed towards higher growth and inflation.
- The fact that inflation remains well above the Fed's 2% target continued to provide upward pressure on Treasury yields. A stronger-than-anticipated August Consumer Price Index (CPI) print of +0.4% month on month, together with an in-line core Personal Consumption Expenditures (PCE) number of +0.2%, has fuelled the narrative that the economy is still running hot, particularly given the tariff backdrop. This was reflected in the upward revision to second-quarter GDP at the end of the month.
- The European Central Bank (ECB) and Bank of England (BoE) held their base rates at 2% and 4%, respectively, and offered a more hawkish tone in their meetings, which helped German bunds and UK gilts to enjoy a more stable month. This was reflected in credit spreads, as European high yield and financials continued to grind tighter, seemingly unfazed by the uptick in supply. The contingent convertible bond (CoCo) index reached its tightest-ever spread level of +230bp at the end of the month, largely as a result of the strong technical backdrop, which persists. An absence of negative news allowed equities to continue their positive trajectory in both the US and Europe.

Portfolio Commentary

- The team made several changes to the portfolio's asset allocation in September, with the main theme of reducing interest rate duration by replacing rates with credit. This was achieved by bringing down the Fund's allocation to 10-year US Treasuries and 10-year German bunds as well as by fully unwinding the short-dated Treasury bills position and replacing this with high-quality, short-dated credit across different sectors.
- The portfolio changes were implemented as the probability of a recession across developed markets has decreased, as evidenced by upward revisions to economic growth projections. This means that the latest rally in rates makes Treasuries appear less attractive while the economic backdrop for high-quality credit improves. Carry remains the primary source of return for fixed income investors.
- The Fund was well positioned to benefit from the latest rally in rates and credit, posting a positive total return in September. Bank Additional Tier 1s (AT1s) were the biggest contributor to Fund performance, as European banks continued to post impressive financials, with resilient asset quality, elevated net interest margins and low levels of non-performing loans. The government bond bucket, largely through 10-year US Treasuries, was the second-biggest contributor, benefiting from the latest rally as investors priced in more near-term rate cuts amid a weakening labour market. There were no detractors in September.

Market Outlook and Strategy

- The pace and scale of the Fed's interest rate cuts in the medium term remain uncertain. Investors continue to consider the state of the labour market and rate of inflation as key factors driving the Fed's decision-making in both the short and medium term, with economic data releases being closely followed. Despite this, credit fundamentals continue to outperform expectations, fuelling the strong technical that persists throughout both corporates and financials.
- With credit spreads well below their medium-term averages, they are likely to gravitate wider in the coming months, and thus our general preference for shorter maturities and higher credit quality remains. At this stage of the cycle, with yields still elevated, we feel that we can build a fixed income portfolio at an attractive level of carry without reaching for too much duration or credit risk.
