Market Commentary

- Investors recalibrated the odds of near-term interest rate cuts throughout November as conflicting economic data and central bank commentary contributed to volatility in policy expectations. Early in the month, weak US employment indicators and deteriorating consumer sentiment encouraged investors to lean into the possibility that the Federal Reserve (Fed) would cut rates in December. Hawkish commentary from Fed officials then pushed the implied probability of a December rate cut to as low as 27%, which lifted Treasury yields and cooled risk sentiment. Dovish remarks from policymakers, together with speculation that Kevin Hassett was the likely frontrunner to become the next Fed chairman, reignited expectations of a December cut, pushing the odds above 80% and supporting a broad risk rally. Investors also focused on reassessing whether technology valuations had gone too far, with the remarkable run of artificial intelligence (AI) stocks drawing fears of a bubble. This compounded the fragile risk appetite in early November. In fixed income, after a wave of big deals in recent months, unease grew about the 'capital expenditure treadmill' that the AI boom has created.
- November brought further signs of stress in the private credit market. Investors expressed concerns over the illiquidity of long-term loans held by private credit funds, as well as the opacity of valuations that rely on internal valuations rather than transparent public market pricing. Private credit market stress was most evident with turmoil at Blue Owl Capital, which cancelled a planned merger between two of its private credit funds following investor criticism. The incident raised questions over whether 'hidden risk' is embedded in some private credit funds, and compounds concerns surrounding weaker underwriting standards.
- UK Chancellor Rachel Reeves delivered her much-anticipated Autumn Budget. The most important feature was that of heavily backloaded fiscal consolidation, with tax-raising measures due to take effect further down the line. The main measures included £26bn of tax rises by 2029 from frozen income tax thresholds, National Insurance on salary-sacrifice pensions, and higher taxes on dividends and property. This left 10-year gilt yields 10 basis points lower on the week, with the rally likely a result of the fact that there were no unexpected announcements.

Portfolio Commentary

- The portfolio remained well positioned to deal with realistic macroeconomic volatility. The portfolio managers (PMs) continued to keep the portfolio's average credit quality high, while managing duration exposure. The team's preference for extending duration through government securities rather than credit markets remained. The credit portion of the portfolio was defensive relative to historical levels, with the PMs avoiding CCC and weaker single-B names. The PMs continued to target carry in good-quality credit and maintained liquidity to take advantage of periods of volatility when they presented themselves.
- The Fund was well positioned to benefit from bouts of buoyancy among market participants and withstand spells of weakness. US Treasuries were the biggest contributor to the Fund's performance following a late November rally that was driven by policymakers' dovish remarks, which led investors to price in a greater probability of a Fed rate cut in December. Bank Additional Tier 1s (AT1s) also performed well, thanks to the strong technical that has persisted in the asset class. There were no detractors as spreads were well contained and investor demand persisted.

Market Outlook and Strategy

- Volatility should subside heading into the festive period. Before then, though, investors will be keen to dissect any Fed speech or US economic data to price the possibility of a rate cut at the central bank's December meeting. Primary market activity should also slow as issuers look to the new year to bring deals to the market, given the lack of activity in the latter part of December.
- From an asset allocation perspective, it is worth reiterating that the opportunity cost of not stretching down the credit quality spectrum is not particularly high at present. Given the yields on offer in the BB/BBB part of the market, one does not need to import much default risk to target mid-to-high single-digit returns. While there are localised pockets of weakness, the credit story remains well supported. Conviction around returns for higher-quality credit remains strong, since accessing these high overall yields does not require taking on too much duration or default risk.
